

Jesse Kerns, M.P.S., is a Program Manager for Syracuse University's Center for Sustainable Community Solutions (CSCS). Through federal and state grants, he works with communities across New York State to reduce waste through initiatives that promote food loss prevention, food rescue, composting, and beneficial compost use. In 2017, Mr. Kerns received a master's degree in Environmental Science from the State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry (SUNY-ESF). He currently lives in Oswego County, NY and enjoys gardening, hiking, reading, and playing music with friends.
