

Katie Hallas has worked in sustainable community development and food systems for over 15 years as an educator, advocate, planner, grantmaker, and program designer. She has worked on farms throughout the Northeast, helped launch a food co-operative in Keene, New Hampshire, developed nonprofit programs as a board member of the Groundswell Center for Local Food and Farming in Ithaca, served as the Sustainability Planner for the Town of Ithaca, and led the Sustainable Ithaca grantmaking program at the Park Foundation in Ithaca. Katie also taught in the Sustainable Farming and Food Systems Program at Tompkins Cortland Community College and led long-term community planning initiatives throughout Tompkins County. Katie is the coordinator of Tompkins Food Future. She lives in Ithaca, NY with her husband and two sons, where she loves to swim under the sun and ramble the forests in search of flowers and wild food.
